Sugar Dressing Protocol

Diabetic Ulcers could lead up to very serious conditions.

Pastor Robert was lying in bed pondering his life with a below-the-knee amputation, his diabetic ulcer didn't respond to intravenous antibiotics.

When sugar or honey is packed on top of and inside of an open wound, it dissolves in the fluid exuding from the wound, creating a highly concentrated medium. Bacteria cannot exist in this environment, and infection is dramatically curbed. This natural remedy for diabetes related wounds also reduces swelling and encourages the removal of dead tissue to make room for new growth.

Over the next few weeks, Pastor Robert's foot began to regain its normal color, and eventually the wound healed completely. Today, he's beating diabetes with Gluco Sugar Balance supplements, and he is nearly 200 pounds lighter. He walks several miles a day on his own God-given legs.

- Unravel a 4" x 4" piece of gauze into a long strip and coat it with Vaseline. Place it around the outside edges of the wound, like a donut.
- Cover the wound with ¼-inch of sugar. (The Vaseline "donut" will keep it in place.)
- Place a 4" x 4" sponge on top of the wound. Bandage it firmly but not too snugly with a cling dressing.
- Change the dressing every one or two days. Remove, irrigate with water, saline, or hydrogen peroxide, pat dry, and repeat steps 1–3.

Some get treated that have an infected diabetic ulcer—which is so far gone the skin was almost black..

NOTE: Do not try this on a bleeding wound, as sugar promotes bleeding.
